ORDER

“(1) that the defendant is not likely to flee or pose a danger to the safety of any person in the community if released; (2) that the appeal is not for the purpose of delay; (3) that the appeal raises a substantial question of law or fact; and (4) that if that substantial question is determined favorably to defendant on appeal, that decision is likely to result in reversal or an order for a new trial of all counts on which imprisonment has been imposed.”

First, I find that Shrouf could pose a danger to the safety of others in the community if he followers that he would be back once the government changed. If he remains on release, he may well continue his illicit efforts.

Second, I find that delay is one of the purposes for Shrout's appeal. Following his conviction on April 21, 2017, Shrout requested a competency hearing which delayed sentencing. In addition, he filed three motions to set over his sentencing dates and I granted each of those. At his sentencing on October 22, 2018, Shrout requested a delay in the date he was to report to prison. Thereafter, he filed four additional motions to delay reporting to prison. Shrout was convicted more than 21 months ago. I agree with the government's sentiment that where justice is delayed, justice is denied. General deterrence is a crucial factor in tax cases where our system is based on voluntary compliance of the citizens.

Third, I find the appeal does not raise a substantial question of law or fact. The multiple efforts by the government to bring Shrout to justice were neither vindictive nor based on bad motives. Shrout had been plying his trade for over 10 years, had an international following, produced several books and DVDs to promote this tax dodging scheme. The investigation of the case was complex. And, during the course of its investigation, the government discovered additional information that warranted the filing of a superseding indictment. As to Shrout's 6th Amendment claim, I held a Faretta hearing and found Shrout's decision to forgo counsel valid. He knowingly and intelligently waived his 6th Amendment right to counsel in order to conduct his own defense. He fully understood the nature of the charges against him, knew the possible penalties he was facing and, most importantly, was aware of the dangers and disadvantages of self-representation. When I said Shrout was not competent, I meant that he did not have a thorough knowledge of the legal system, the rules of evidence and criminal procedure – all the knowledge and experience his stand-by lawyer possessed and was willing to employ to defend Shrout.

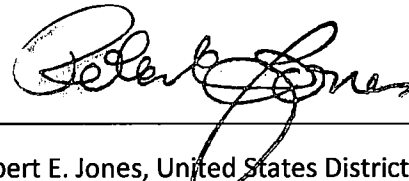

Because Shrout is not able to satisfy the first three conditions required in Wheeler, I do not address the fourth. This was not a close case—there was overwhelming evidence of Shrout's guilt. Even if he were to prevail on an issue on appeal, it is unlikely to result in reversal or an order for a new trial of all counts on which imprisonment has been imposed.

For the foregoing reasons, I deny Shrout's Motion to Continue Release Pending Appeal.

It is so ordered.

Dated this 30th day of January, 2019.

Robert E. Jones, United States District Court
